New 'Tank Killer' in Action

Duke of Kent Welcomed to New York

His royal highness, the duke of Kent, brother of King George VI of England, is welcomed to New York city by Mayor Fiorello H. LaGuardia. The duke, in a plane of the Canadian air force, landed at LaGuardia field, where this picture was made. He took an automobile for Hyde Park, where he spent the week-end with President Roosevelt.

Buttons! Buttons! Who Has the Button

All of the New Costumes Feature Buttons.

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

Buttons, watch buttons! There's going to be "oodles" of buttons out on dress parade this fall. In fact be prepared for a regular stampede of buttons in the world of fashion, during the coming months. The trend to functional clothes and the new importance of surface decoration is focusing fashion attention on buttons. They accomplish the twin feat of being decorative as well as useful.

The sentiment is toward big buttons, bulky, massive and sometimes quite bizarre. Buttons may be classified into three types, metal, plastic and jewel. A decided innovation is the use of white buttons. Many of the plastic button originals are being done in white versions. Buttons that snap on and off are a real "find." You can change them to tune to the color scheme of your costume accessories.

You can get metal buttons that have a hand-wrought look giving them the appearance of expensive pins. There is a new type in which the motif is more or less chiseled out and you can see the fabric of the dress through the opening. These buttons in which metal is outlined in a circle are identified as silhouette types. Clips and brooches in matching design companion these silhouette buttons and offer endless possibilities for ensembling handbag, hat and muff to the costume.

Plastic buttons are of three types, sculptured, moulded and hand-twisted. It is the latter ones that offer the biggest, knobbiest appearance which accords perfectly with the new style trend. Plastics offer delectable color developments, especially so in flower themes and in other buttons shaped exactly like maple leaves, the veins carved out for detail and the leaves hand-colored in realistic tones.

Glitter will be popular this fall, and the rhinestone "lovelies" that usually shine on velvet will also make their appearance on sheer wools and dressy crepes. A wonderfully interesting rhinestone is a single large stone scintillating in an antique setting. It has a tailored feeling which makes it suited to simpler fashions. Moonstones are a very new note in jewel buttons, shown in a whole range of tempting colors.

INTELLIGENCE TESTS

Here is a test involving a yardstick in which there have been left several tacks with rather wide heads. These tacks are at the 7-, 12-, 18- and 26-inch marks, with one each also at the beginning and the end.

Allow three minutes to answer the questions below:

1. How many different distances are there between these tacks, taken by twos in all possible ways?

2. Which tack is exactly halfway between the ends?

3. One certain number of inches, greater than four and less than 13, does not occur between any two of the tacks. What is that distance?

(Public Ledger—WNU Service.)

Answers to the Above Test
1. (3) Nine inches.
2. Fourteen. (2) The one at 18.

Sunset Not a Copy

"A sunset," said Hi Ho, the sage of Chinatown, "is more beautiful than any painting. And is it not the more beautiful because it seeks to copy nothing that has often made life burdensome, such as people and their dwelling places?"

Pimento Used for Canes

The wood of the pimento tree, which thrives principally in Jamaica, is extensively used for fine walking sticks.

Temple Bells For War Metal

Japan Strips All Edifices to Supply Shortage Caused By War With China.

TOKYO.—Old temple bells, met now with the years, are a symbol of the Japan which is being devoured by the ever-hungry war gods.

More than four years of the China campaign, plus the United States embargo on scrap, have left the empire in dire need of a melting pot for copper and brass and iron.

The great foundries of Japan were fashioned to handle scrap, not raw ore, and months would be needed to make the change. Pig iron and scrap melt down into materials of war when mingled in the proper proportion, but alone they take a different sort of furnace.

Temples Are Stripped.

Brass was needed, too, so the temples are being stripped of their fixtures, including the bells.

For months iron manhole covers have been missing in the streets, with wood or concrete substitutes in their place.

Men are going through the empire's warehouses with typical Oriental thoroughness, looking for rusty typewriters and old buckets or perhaps a discarded filing case, while over through the countryside others are ripping the metal caps from telephone and telegraph poles.

In the communications ministry alone about three tons of scrap iron, 30 worthless typewriters, and some 12,000 ashtrays and 300 cabinets have been delivered up.

Stately Hibiya park is losing its iron railings and its Russian cannon, on proud display as a trophy of the Russo-Japanese war. Even the diet (parliament) building is not exempt, and its fences and imposing gates are doomed, too.

Japan Explains,

Iron ladders in the sleeping cars on trains have been replaced with others made of wood, the locomotives have been stripped of their burnished numerals and the iron grills have been taken from the ticket-windows. Wood is now the rule.

A recent bulletin of the board of information gave this explanation of the metal harvest:

"This move is not the outcome of any positive dearth of metals, but is rather a temporary measure for obtaining enough scrap for national defense during the period to come before the intended wholesale alteration of the steel production system.

"Work in some great factories, the statement pointed out, is virtually at a standstill, "chiefly on account of the ban placed on export of scrap by the United States apparently as an economic sanction against this country."

Appomattox needs boosters.
